Ex-wife expresses tribute

By GAIL L. ROBERSON
Record Columnist

(Editor's note: Gail Roberson is an eastern North Carolina columnist who submits her material monthly to the Zebulon Record and other papers throughout the state.)

Now and then, a reader relays a personal experience for the purpose of passing along life's lessons to others. This week a woman telephoned and said that she wished to pay special tribute to her ex-husband's wife. That statement, in itself, was powerful enough to get my attention, but as she told me the rest of the story, I realized how much all of us could benefit from it. We should give special thanks to both these women for uniting their personal love and strengths instead of grappling with the jealousy and pain it could have caused. Here is her story:

"Thirty years ago, I separated from my first husband. I could no longer deal with the strain of the tremendous problems of our marriage. Our child was adopted by my second husband, and we made a new life together with a husband and father who has been caring and understanding to us both ever since.

"But my first husband could never go longer than a month without telephoning me. My husband took the calls and dealt with him as gently as he could. He understood that, though I was his wife now and truly loved him, my first husband also had special problems and special needs, and he was extremely patient to his cause. My ex-husband would say to him, 'Tell her I still wear her wedding band, and I'll never take it off.'

"He was never really able to let me go. He had to maintain some type of contact all those years. Eventually, though, he met a poised, compassionate, younger woman that I'm certain the Lord sent to him on purpose. She was a beautiful Christian soul. It was only after he met her that his calls finally stopped.

"This woman accepted the fact that I was a part of her husband's life that he would never completely lay aside. She understood that he had to keep my wedding ring — that it represented things he evidently still needed, and a past he was truly sorry for. She loved and cared for him, and comprehended in ways I still cannot. Then, he became very sick. She was constantly by his side, nursing him through every painful moment. She would telephone to say how he was doing. She told me how she had been blessed to know him and to become his wife. I didn't always understand, for he had presented so many problems I could not handle; yet he brought her great happiness. I found so much in her and her attitude to admire and respect. She made my own life easier, and my memories of bad times more gentle on my mind.

"As his health deteriorated and he lost weight, the ring had to be removed. He kept it in a top dresser drawer and told his wife to place it back upon his finger before he was buried. He had a great fear of being in the ground, so when he passed away, she had his body interred above ground instead. And, she also placed my wedding ring back upon his hand. It was her final unselfish act of love.

"With all the bitterness and hatred people have toward one another today, and for all the foolish reasons they have it, I need to pay special tribute to a woman who, given such an unusual circumstance, bore out her unselfish love for this man with great dignity and pride.

"I need for her to know how deeply I appreciate her — for loving him, caring for him and understanding what so many other women could have never dealt with. She is the most unselfish, caring, Christian woman I have ever known. Thank God for sending her to my first husband. Thank God for all the happiness she brought to him, and him to her, and for the impact their unity in life has had upon my own.

"This is a special 'thank you' to my ex-husband's wife, for showing him that, though he could have his faults, he could also have a chance to know real love, and a real life through a woman who had the Christian courage to put jealousy aside and give love — unselfishly."

After her call this week, I've kept thinking about this woman's story. Thinking of Song of Solomon 8:6, "Love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave." Thinking that love is, above all else, the gift of oneself, unselfishly. Thinking about how two women came to one meeting of the minds and one unity of the heart, for the sake of one man. About a second husband who also loved enough to understand, unselfishly. And about life in general. How strange it is. How simple it could be. If all of us could only put away jealousy — and give unselfishly.
