War's children: Someone here cares about you

Last time I was in a flower shop, I noticed this row of gift baskets that didn't fit in.

They were lined up with the other deliveries going to the hospital — mostly your garden-variety lilies, your waxy arrangements of fruit that nobody ever eats. But these particular baskets were different — under the rose-colored shrink wrap were crayons and coloring books, stuffed animals and little toy trucks.

That was why they didn't belong. Because other than the maternity ward, hospitals aren't a place you expect to find children. And when you do, grown-up gestures such as get-well cards and flowers feel clumsy and foolish.

No, children need something practical, something to show that no matter how cheerless and sunless and tediously adult their surroundings might be, they are still children. They need, in a word, toys.

LORRAINE
AHEARN

She encouraged him to think of something useful to do, according to a story in the New Bern Sun Journal. And like any 6-year-old worth his salt, Brian replied that he wanted to send toys: "They don't have anything to play with."

I was thinking about those out-of-place gift baskets this week after getting a call from Carol Upchurch, a reader from Summerfield. She's been watching the war on TV, and as for many Americans, it's been a time of despair for the 53-year-old graphic artist. Despair of anything she can do at this distance. Despair in the details.

For instance, it's not just seeing hospital footage of a 12-year-old bombing victim who lost both arms. It's realizing that the boy isn't crying.

Nor is it a stray report about a child hurt after she picked up an explosive device and it blew up. It's more the description of the injury that stays with Upchurch — "nonlife-threatening." Does that mean a hand? She wants to know. A finger? And one more child without the least choice in the matter, in the wrong place at the very wrong time?

Fortunately, however, Upchurch kept listening to the news, and found out something she could do.

She heard a story about a 6-year-old boy in Cherry Point, the son of a Marine Corps Harrier pilot deployed in the Gulf. The child, Brian Zacherl, had seen some of the same images of injured Iraqi children and said to his mother, "Oh, children get hurt in wars."

She encouraged him to think of something useful to do, according to a story in the New Bern Sun Journal. And like any 6-year-old worth his salt, Brian replied that he wanted to send toys: "They don't have anything to play with."

So began "Kids Helping Kids," a toy drive in which school children in the coastal military community began collecting small, good-as-new toys to send to Iraqi children affected by the war.

After hearing the story, Carol Upchurch this week began spreading the word in her own community, arranging toy collection sites at the Summerfield Fire Department and Laughlin Elementary School. Her husband, Robert Gerhart, meanwhile set up a collection box at the UNCG art department, where he is an associate professor.

By mid-May, their goal will be to send a truckload of donated toys to Havelock, where the local chamber of commerce is sponsoring the project.

To Upchurch, it seemed fitting that a child proposed the idea.

"Everyone knows what it was like to be a kid holding your favorite toy," Upchurch said.

"It's a small way to reach out, but for some of these traumatized children, maybe this will help them understand that there are people around the world, strangers they've never met, who care about them."

The object of Kids Helping Kids is to collect small toys including crayons, coloring books, soccer balls and stuffed animals, but "no dolls." They will be shipped to children injured in Iraq by late May, so donations are requested by May 15.

Currently, the drop-off sites are:

- Summerfield Fire Department at Summerfield and Pleasant Ridge roads;

- UNCG art department in Room 158-A, McIver Building.

HOLMDEL, NJ 07733

Dear Cousin Carol,

It was very nice to have you phone all day. I hope your daughter will be successful in locating her cousin Robert Borden U, III in Germany. Please let me know how this all turns out.

I was sorry to hear of the death of Ted Kennedy and will write to Eleanor expressing my condolences. We had a lonely visit from Abbie in Tucson about three years ago. Eleanor has really been helpful to me.

Details on the U B are enclosed. I do hope you will want to subscribe. We need support. Perhaps you might know of others who could be interested.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Sincerely yours
Phil Upchurch

and her sister Diana Mae U were adopted as sisters and raised together. Their names were changed to Carol Zella Turner and Diana Mae Turner. We think Carol is becoming interested in her Upchurch heritage

as a child (a JUN 1949 with her sister and her parents).
