Museum saves country doctor history

By MATT SHAW
Record Staff Writer

A museum in Bailey recalls an era that many of us cannot remember.

The Country Doctor Museum honors a time when doctors had to be much more than healers. They often were also pharmacists, bookkeepers, gardeners, horsemen, obstetricians, coroners, family counselors, confidants and friends.

The small museum in Bailey is the only museum in the United States that is devoted to the type of doctor that began to be phased out by the modernization and specialization of medicine, according to the curator.

Today a visitor to a doctor's office fills out forms for a receptionist, then is examined often by a nurse before seeing a physician, museum curator Emilie English said.

"You don't even see the doctor, really, except for a few minutes," she said.

In the 19th century, though, the doctor had to do everything as the museum shows. It actually is a composite restoration of two doctors' offices.

The office of Dr. Howard Franklin Freeman dates back to 1857. It has been converted into an apothecary. Shelves from the 1880s are lined with authentic bottles of the era.

The office of Dr. Cornelius Henry Brantley, circa 1887, now features medical devices and items from that century.

The museum was started in 1967 by Josephine Newell and Gloria Graham. Both had come from families of doctors and had collected a lot of anti-quoted equipment that became the foundation of the museum, Mrs. English said.

The museum maintains a medicinal herb garden, growing many of the plants that were once and still are used as medicines.

For example, the stem of witchhazel is an astringent. Foxglove becomes a heart medicine. Dill aids digestion.

"Evidently they weren't afraid to try things or else how could they have found these things out," Mrs. English said.

The museum has a few examples of quackery — scalpels used in bloodletting, instruments to relieve "pressure on the brain," devices to apply electrical current to inflamed areas, and tonic waters containing morphine.

But even some of these theories come back into vogue, she said, noting recent experimentation with leeches.

The museum also features a few oddities. On display is an operating table that was used during the Civil War.

Place in history

Formerly the offices of two doctors, this building is now The Country Doctor Museum.

Also there are Matthew Moore Butler's surgical tools, believed to have been used by Butler to assist in the May 1863 amputation of General Stonewall Jackson's left arm.

The museum also has Butler's journal, recording various charges generally between $1 to $1.50. "Wouldn't that be great today?" she said.

A rate chart from 1866 prices amputation of an arm or leg at $25, amputation of a toe or finger at $5 to $25, treatment of syphilis in its advanced stages at $20 to $30, and delivery of a baby at $10.

Not dating back that far are the museum's "guest curators," mainly retired doctors, many of whom add to the oral histories at the museum.

"There's so many older physicians who have so much to share, so much to tell," Mrs.

English added.

Dr. Ben Thomas of Zebulon will be guest curator of the museum this Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

To get to the museum, take U.S. 264 east and exit at N.C. 581 South. Follow the signs to the museum on Vance Street.

4. Calvin Turner HORTON, son of Littleberry HORTON and Penealope PIERCE, was born 13 February 1819 in Wake County, North Carolina. He married Sarah (Sallie) ELLIS on 31 December 1838.¹ Sarah was born 16 June 1819 and died 22 November 1884.² After Sarah's death, Calvin married Martha NEWELL.³

Politically, Calvin lived in troubled times. He lived through the turbulent years of the Civil War where, too often, brother fought against brother. True, North Carolina did secede on 20 May 1861, but there were sizable Unionist minorities existing in the state. Of course, we all know that Lincoln was President.

In the late 1840's beards were coming back into popular favor again after being out of fashion for seventy or eighty years. Lincoln was our first bearded President. The photographs that we have of Calvin shows him as clean shaven. Perhaps it was taken before this fad came back in vogue.

Calvin was a man of large land properties. He was strongly opposed to slavery and would own no slaves. He turned much of his estate into gold before the Civil War thereby saving it. He was noted for his fondness for fine horses and always wore the best clothing that money would buy. He was universally respected in the community.⁷ He died suddenly, at age 79, on the 26th of June 1898.⁸ In his will he names Martha NEWELL as his wife and gives her his store in Wakefield as well as his gold watch and chain for life. After her death, it was willed to Oma LILES.
 Both Calvin and Sarah are buried in the HORTON cemetery in Wake County, North Carolina. PG 105
