Notes for CARL RAY BURRIS:

On January 1, 1900, Carl Ray Burris started to work for the Frisco Railroad as an engine crew "call boy" at the Choteau Avenue roundhouse in St. Louis. He was only 17, but lied about his age to get the job. He worked various jobs and was promoted to hostler.

June of 1903, he resigned from the Frisco to attend Henderson Business College. His short academic career lasted only until September 3, 1903 when he went to work for the Rock Island Railroad at Union, MO. When he first moved away from home, his father (Craven Haywood Beck Burris) gave him $5 to last him until the end of the month when he (Carl) would be paid. That was not enough money, so he bought loaves of bread and went back to the rooming house to eat lunch every day. Daniel Ulrey noticed this, and gave Carl Ray Burris enough money to last him so that he could eat. Daniel Ulrey Burris is named in honor of Daniel Ulrey. He watched engines from Vigus, Versailles, Forsythe Junction and Windsor until about a year later he was promoted to fireman on September 6, 1904. He was later promoted to engineer and worked as an engineer until his retirement in January 1953. Once on a trip to New Orleans, he went down to the docks to buy some bananas. Carl Ray Burris loved bananas and he heard you could get them cheaper at the dock. He asked the man for a quarters worth and the man handed him the whole stalk. Carl Ray was too embarrassed to let on that this was unexpected, and he took the stalk home and began to eat and eat. He ate until they began to turn black, and still he ate some more. He ate bananas until he was so sick of bananas that until his death, he could not stand to be in a house that had a banana in it. The smell of a banana made him sick to his stomach.
