The real Old Raleigh

History uncovers roots of the City of Oaks

Photos from 'Raleigh, City of Oaks': WPTF's first remote truck, 1930 (upper right), what fashionable ladies of 1843 were wearing (right) and 1879 Grand Fair procession on Fayetteville Street. The fair was sponsored by the N.C. Industrial Association, a group formed to encourage development among blacks.

By LYNN JOHNSON
Times staff writer

So you think you know your Capital City history. Quick. Identify these famous Raleighites:

The nursing educator who founded Rex Hospital Training School for Nurses around 1896.

The doctor, humanitarian and scientist whose name adorns a building at N.C. State University.

The man named for two Northern states who left Raleigh in 1936 to become a reporter for The Wall Street Journal, the newspaper which he eventually served as editor.

The answers are Dorothea Dix, Jane S. McKimmon and Vermont Connecticut Royster.

Vickers

It may be a little harder to name the author of the newest history of the Capital City.

That's because James Vickers, who penned "Raleigh, City of Oaks" — due in local bookstores next week — is neither a current nor previous Raleigh resident. He lives in Chapel Hill.

Furthermore, the book was published by a Woodland Hills, Calif., publishing company — a fer piece from the East.

Doing a book about a place he's never lived, Vickers said, was "easier than if I had lived there. I had no prejudices, no theories to defend. Total objectivity."

The publishing company, however, wasn't quite as objective. The West coast editors added their own "Southern California view of North Carolina race problems," Vickers said. When he noticed that slant, he immediately set the editors straight.

After writing a 186-page, 300-year (from Sir Walter to Mayor Smedes) history of Raleigh, Vickers probably has now forgotten more Raleigh history than most residents ever knew.

Most of his research was done in Wilson Library at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, he said, and took place over five months.

His research uncovered some real gems — like an 1880 visitor's notes on Raleigh: "It was the damndest place I had ever seen ... the cows and hogs roaming the streets giving it something of a rural atmosphere." The observer was Herbert Hutchinson Brimley, who despite the unfavorable first impression decided to settle here. He later became a well-known and respected Raleighite.

The book is a popular history, Vickers said, bridging the gap between picture book and scholarly treatment — two approaches to the city's past which already repose on Raleigh library shelves and coffeetables.

His work is a readable $22.50 volume with juicy tidbits interspersed — enough to raise a few eyebrows.

Like the day, for example, that Andrew Johnson, the U.S. president born in Raleigh, came to town to dedicate a statue of his father and supposedly questioned if the man were his father. The stuff of which scandals are made.

Vickers didn't want to make waves, though. "I concentrated on people that were dead and wouldn't get excited," he said.

The Wake County Historical Society, which sponsored the project, had asked historian and lifelong Raleigh resident Beth Crabtree to write the book. When she became ill, Vickers, who had been hired to write a business addendum to the book, took over the entire job.

A free-lance writer whose experience consisted solely of grants and technical reports, Vickers had never done such a project before. Neither had the other two people involved — the Chapel Hill photo-researcher and the Enka dentist who did the color photography.

Because it was their first such endeavor, they may have expended more effort, Vickers said. The text, for example, turned out 65 pages longer than the publishers had requested.

Due to the nature of a history, Vickers admitted, "there are long passages that are deadly dull, like the amount of construction in the 1890s. But whenever I was able to deal with personalities, I did."

Oh, those personalities.

Like William Glendenning, who built one of Raleigh's first churches. "He frequently talked to God and the devil," Vickers said.

Also mentioned were dueling mayors, embezzling state treasurers, pugilistic newspaper editors.

Along with the characters, he tried to explore certain themes, Vickers said — Raleigh's struggle to become a center of culture, for example. "Long before Raleigh could truly be called a city ... its citizens exhibited a taste for culture — although that taste tended to be decidedly pedestrian," Vickers writes.

In the early days of the theater, Raleighites expressed their displeasure with touring companies' serious plays by cracking nuts and by allowing their children to jump up and down on the seats during performances. One reporter, noting there were no opera houses in town, wrote that Raleighites seemed to be content with "road shows and women's literary clubs."

Even in its early history, Vickers found, Raleigh had its favorite bars. The Yarborough House, for example, was patronized by a familiar crowd — state legislators.

"There is a rush to the barroom from 7 to 9 a.m., for the morning drams. Then there is a lull in the clink of glasses until 11 a.m. But the grand rally is from 10 at night until 1 in the morning. Then it is that the legislators and their friends surge in like the waves," wrote one newspaper.

Then were the things that the editors left out due to space considerations: a Raleigh newspaperwoman's scathing remarks, for example, about an upcoming Raleigh society event — the debutante ball. Nell Battle Lewis called the affair a "private ceremony of initiation by which adolescents are admitted to full membership to the tribe."

Another vocal female, Vickers said, was Anne Royall, an early 18th-century writer whose distaste for tobacco-chewing women was almost as strong as her anti-religious sentiments.

Here and there, Vickers permits his own irreverence to surface. A doctor who was run out of Tarboro for malpractice found popularity in the Capital City: "Raleigh residents (were) less fastidious in their character judgments than their Tarboro counterparts, because (the doctor) prospered very well upon his return to the Capital," he writes.

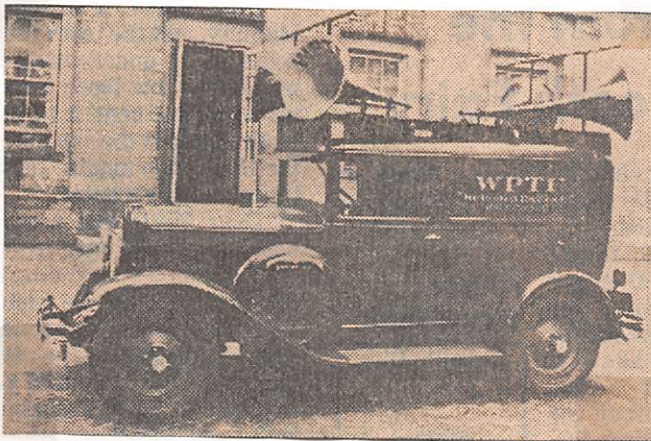

Vickers hopes the book will spark some interest in important local personalities that have been largely ignored — controversial 19th-century governor William Wood Holden, for example. "There's not been a biography written on him. It's a big gap in North Carolina history that should be filled."

Will Vickers perhaps write that biography? Not anytime soon, anyway.

He's since been commissioned to write a definitive history of the R.J. Reynolds family and is scrounging for information on tobacco heir Dick Reynolds, who once served as treasurer of the state Democratic party in Raleigh.

He accepted the Raleigh history project because "I needed something to do and hoped that it would be a stepping stone," Vickers said. "I got more from it in that sense than I ever dreamed possible."

She married Gerald Flynn Heisinger, son of Edward Heisinger and Sarah Regina Flynn, on 02 Dec 1944 in Charlottesville, Albemarle Co., VA. He was born on 17 Apr 1919 in Oshkosh, Winnebago Co., WI. He died on 26 Feb 1991 in Dixon, Lee Co., IL.

Notes for Violet Nadine Owen:

Violet and her younger brother Leonard were left with their maternal grandmother and their mother's sister Barbara when Vi was just three and Leonard was 18 months old. Their father went to Indiana and then to Detroit to earn money to pay his debts incurred by the illness and death at the age of 29 of his wife. The family was reunited when Violet was eight years old. When she was 18, she began her nurse's training at Fort Sanders Hospital in Knoxville, TN. While she was there, a congenital kidney ailment was discovered and one kidney was removed. It was this missing kidney which kept her from joining the US Army. Undaunted, she worked for the Army as a civilian nurse in Crossville, TN, where she met Jerry.
